

Lot 26, Old Bathurst Road, Woodford – Cox’s Road issues.

Following, are photographs taken by me November 2007, all on lot 26, relating to apparent remnants of Cox’s original trail marking and his crew’s original roadworks, seemingly abandoned once a better and more suitable alternative parallel route was found, thereby leaving exclusive primary markings by him and his crew in the preliminary stages of forming the Cox’s road. These are apparently unique and not found at any other site on the Cox’s Road across the Blue Mountains.

Apparent markings made by Cox with pick, for his work crew to follow. South end of lot 26. South of pedestal rocks, near flat rock.

More apparent markings of Cox, with pick, South end of Lot 26. North of pedestal rocks

Apparent commencement of rock excavation work by Cox's work crew, south end of Lot 26. North of pedestal rock.

Detail of excavation rock work, north of pedestal rocks.

Marking of (so far) unknown significance, near excavation – North of pedestal rocks.

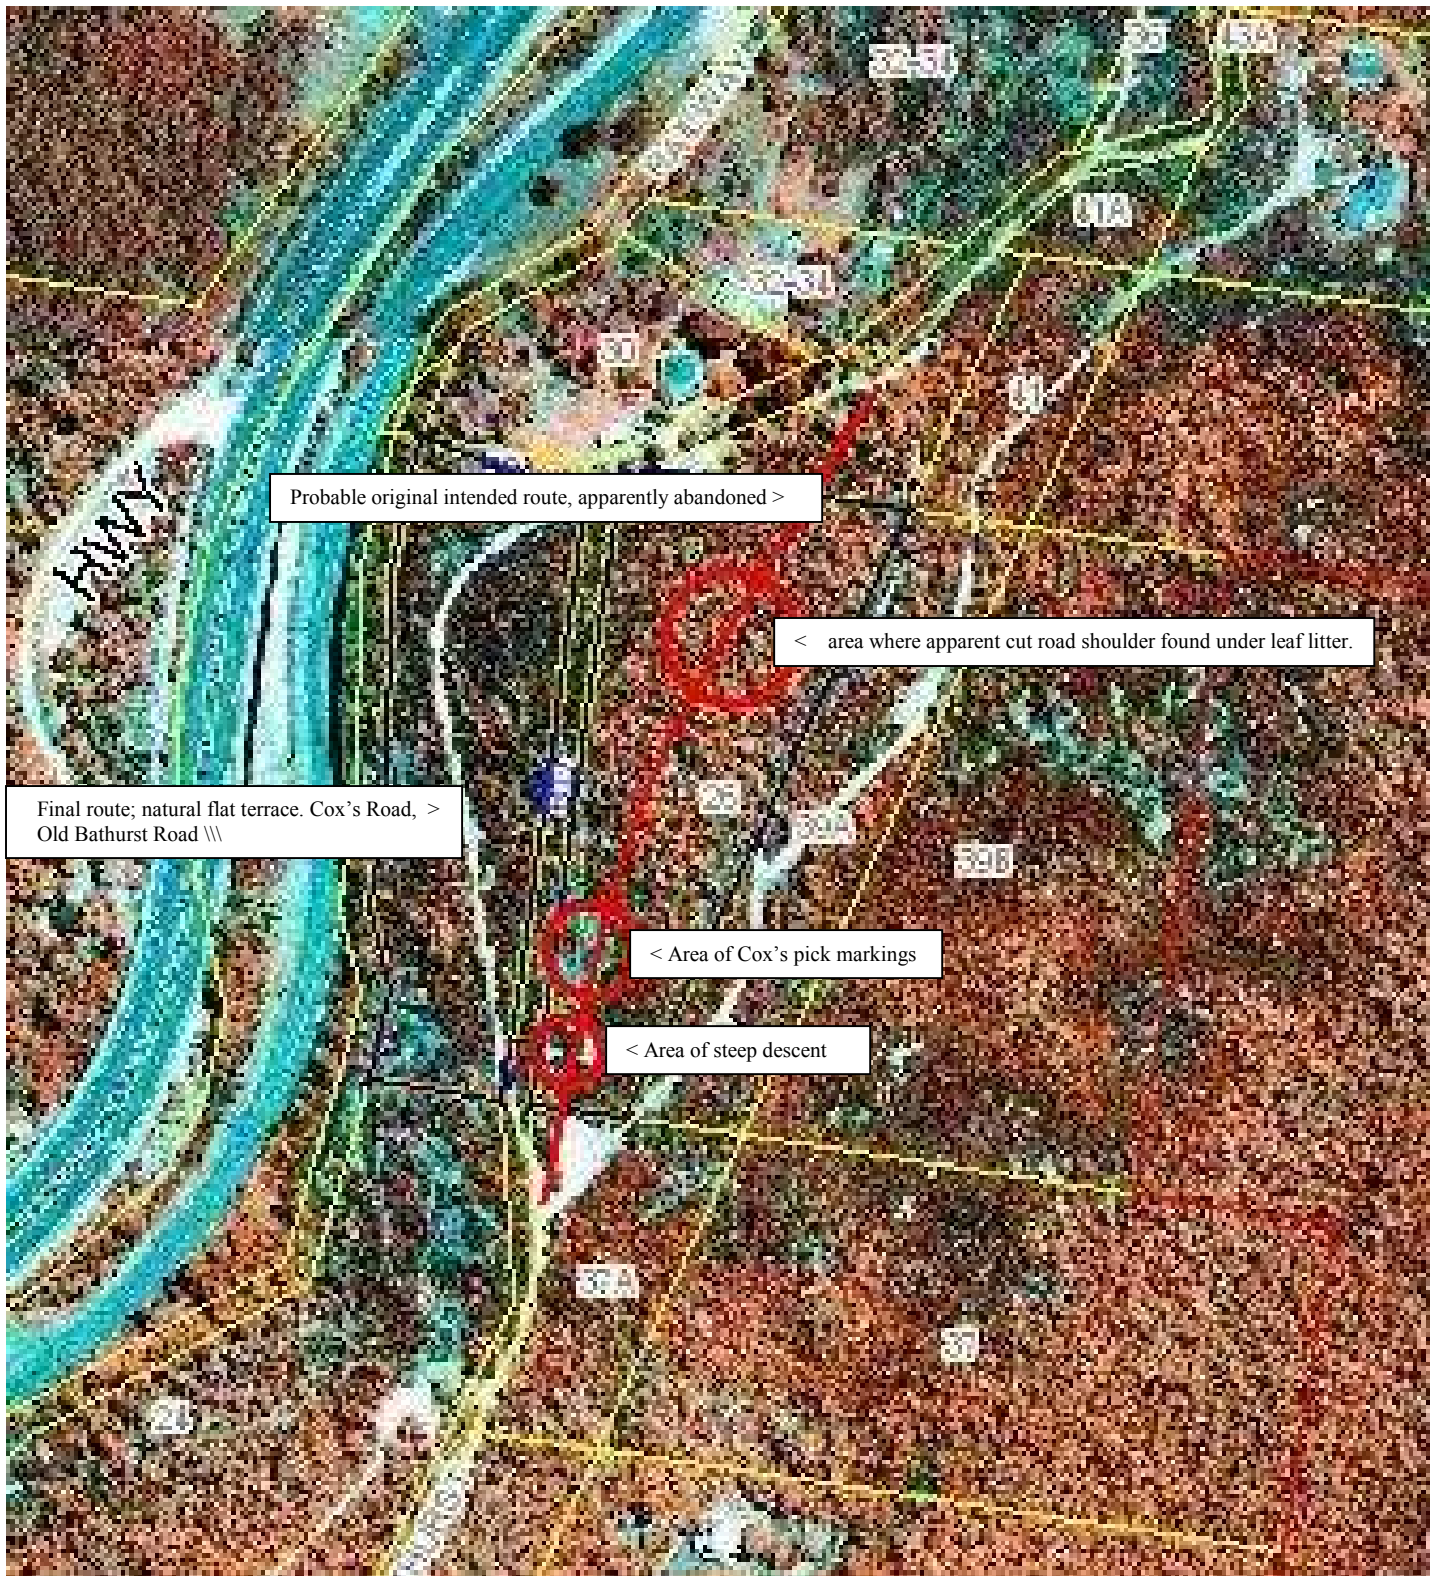

Apparent cut road shoulder, found under leaf litter, North end of Lot 26. This would be under proposed construction area.

Close view of apparent cut road shoulder. Scutcheon marks appear visible in face of rock. Shoulder at bottom.

Cox's Road/The Old Bathurst Road – a natural flat clear terrace. An obvious alternative deviated route for Cox, not needing rock excavation.

Aerial photo sourced from BMCC website

Flora piled on site; 26 Old Bathurst Road, Woodford.

